Part F: Reading Comprehension

Directions: In this part of the test, you will read two passages. Each passage is followed by some questions. Answer the questions about the passages by choosing the best choice (1), (2), (3), or (4). Then mark the correct choice on your answer sheet.

PASSAGE 1:

A pioneering set of experiments has been important in the revolution in our understanding of animal behavior, a revolution that eroded the behaviorist dogma that only humans have minds. These experiments were designed to detect consciousness, that is, signs of self-awareness or self-recognition in animals other than humans.

The scientific investigation of an experience as private as consciousness is frustratingly beyond the usual tools of the experimental psychologist. This may be one reason that many researchers have shied away from the notion of mind and consciousness in nonhuman animals. In the late 1960's, however, psychologist Gordon Gallup devised a test of the sense of self: the mirror test. If an animal were able to recognize its reflection in a mirror as "self," then it could be said to possess an awareness of self, or consciousness. It is known that a cat or a dog reacts to its own image in the mirror, but often it treats it as that of another individual whose behavior very soon becomes puzzling and boring.

The experiment called for familiarizing the animal with the mirror and then marking the animal's forehead with a red spot. If the animal saw the reflection as just another individual, it might wonder about the curious red spot and might even touch the mirror. But if the animal realized that the reflection was of itself, it would probably touch the spot on its own body. The first time Gallup tried the experiment with a chimpanzee, the animal acted as if it knew that the reflection was its own; it touched the red spot on its forehead. Gallup's report of the experiment, published in a 1970 article, was a milestone in our understanding of animal minds, and psychologists wondered how widespread self-recognition would prove to be.

56- What is the main idea of the passage?

- 1) Animals may be more self-aware than humans.
- 2) Dimensions of animal consciousness
- 3) Humans aren't the only animals that are self-aware.
- 4) Consciousness can be taught to animals.

57- The word "dogma" in paragraph 1 is closest in meaning to ... .

- 1) evaluation
- 2) proof
- 3) intention
- 4) belief

58- Which of the following statements best describes the behaviorist position with regard to consciousness in nonhuman animals?

- 1) Most nonhuman animals show signs of self-consciousness.
- 2) Most nonhuman animals can be taught self-consciousness.
- 3) Chimpanzees are the only nonhuman animals that have a human level of self-consciousness.
- 4) Nonhuman animals do not possess self-consciousness.

59- The author suggests that researchers before 1960 probably avoided studying nonhuman animal consciousness because they ... .

- 1) did not wish to experiment with live animal subjects
- 2) were discouraged by earlier unsuccessful experiments that studied human consciousness
- 3) had not yet devised adequate research methods for animal consciousness experiments
- 4) lacked the necessary laboratory equipment

60- What does the author mean when stating "The experiment called for familiarizing the animal with the mirror"?

- 1) The experiment required the use of a chimpanzee that had not participated in previous mirror tests.
- 2) Gallup had to allow the chimpanzee to become accustomed to the mirror before he began the experiment.
- 3) Gallup had to teach the chimpanzee to recognize its reflection in the mirror.
- 4) The chimpanzee had to first watch the experiment being conducted with another chimpanzee.

61- The word "it" in paragraph 3 refers to ... .

- 1) red spot
- 2) mirror
- 3) reflection
- 4) animal

62-The chimpanzee in Gallup's first experiment responded to the mirror test by touching ... .

- 1) its own forehead
- 2) the researcher's forehead
- 3) the red spot on the mirror
- 4) the red spot on another chimpanzee

PASSAGE 2:

Most sources of illumination generate light over a long period of time, and indeed if an object is lit for a very brief time (less than 1.25 second), the human eye will not react in time to see the object. A photographic emulsion—that is, a light-sensitive coating on photographic film, paper, or glass—will, however, record much shorter bursts of light. A photographic flash can therefore be used to capture high-speed movement on film as well as to correct deficiencies of the normal surrounding lighting. Photoflash is now generated electronically, but the earliest form, first used in 1864, was a paper bag containing magnesium wire and some oxygen-rich substance, such as potassium chlorate. When the bag was ignited, the metal burned with an intense flash. A contemporary observer reported that “This quite unsafe device seems to have done nothing worse than fill the room with dense smoke and lead to pictures of low quality and odd poses.”

The development of the photoflash was slow; flashbulbs, containing fine wire made of a metal, such as magnesium or aluminum, were introduced only in the 1920s. In the earliest type, the metal was separated from the oxygen by a thin glass bulb. The flash was fired by piercing the bulb and allowing the oxygen to come into contact with the metal, which was set alight at the same time. Later bulbs were fired by an electric battery, which heated the wire by passing a small current through it. Other combinations, such as the pairing of oxygen difluoride with zirconium, have also been used. In each case, enough energy is given out to heat the oxidizable metal for a short time to a white-hot emission of visible light. The smoke particles are so small that they cool rapidly; but since they are white, they contribute to the brilliance by reflecting the light from their still-glowing neighbors. A slightly bigger form of the metal will burn for a longer time.

63-What does the passage mainly discuss?

- 1) The history of the photoflash
- 2) Theories about how the eye reacts to light
- 3) The technology of modern photography
- 4) The dangers of using the early photoflash

64-According to the passage, 1.25 second is the minimum amount of time required for the ... .

- 1) recording of an image on film
- 2) generation of artificial light
- 3) creation of a photographic emulsion
- 4) human eye to react to see an object

65-According to the passage, what is an advantage of using a photoflash?

- 1) It can produce repeated bursts of light.
- 2) It intensifies colors in photographs.
- 3) It is short enough not to bother human eyes.
- 4) It supplements existing lighting.

66-The word “ignited” in paragraph 1 is closest in meaning to ... .

- 1) set on fire
- 2) cut into
- 3) opened
- 4) shaken

67-What is the function of the glass in the first flashbulbs?

- 1) It produces the spark that initiated the flash.
- 2) It magnifies the light produced by the flash.
- 3) It protects the photographer from the heat of the flash.
- 4) It keeps the metal and oxygen apart before the flash.

68-What does the pronoun “it” in paragraph 2 refer to?

- 1) oxygen
- 2) battery
- 3) wire
- 4) current

69-According to the passage, the white color of the smoke particles generated by a flashbulb contributes to ... .

- 1) rapid cooling

- 4) intense heat

70-According to the passage, a flashbulb can be made to burn longer by using ... .

- 1) a thicker wire
- 2) more oxygen
- 3) thinner glass
- 4) continuous electricity
